THE HAT IN PARLIAMENT

ODD CUSTOMS IN CONNECTION WITH IT.

Members Must Come Into the House and Go Out Uncovered, but Wear Their Hats While Seated.

The hat plays an important part in parliamentary customs, writes Michael McDonagh, in the Nineteenth Century. It also contributes occasionally to the gaiety of life in the House of Commons. No incident is greeted with more hearty laughter than that of a member, after a magnificent peroration, plumping down on his silk hat on the bench behind him. The bashful and awkward member generally figures in these accidents. Most members have sufficient self-possession while speaking to remove their hats from the seats before sitting down; but the misfortune of forgetfulness has befallen even old and cool parliamentary hands, and the result—a misshapen hat—has completely spoiled the effect of some of their most eloquent speeches. A few years ago a London member sat down after his maiden speech on a new silk hat which he had provided in honor of the auspicious occasion, and as he was ruefully surveying his battered headgear, to the amusement of the unfeeling spectators, an Irish representative rose and gravely said, "Mr. Speaker, permit me to congratulate the honorable member on the happy circumstance that when he sat on his hat his head was not in it." The call to "Order, Order," from the speaker was drowned in roars of laughter. This London representative enjoyed the unenviable reputation of being known as "the member who sat on his hat," until some other absent minded legislator unintentionally established his claim to the title by crushing his headgear in a similarly awkward manner.

When men meet together in public assemblies or in social life—as in a theater or at a reception—the ordinary custom is to uncover while they are seated, and to wear their hats as they enter or leave the place. In parliamentary life the rule is reversed. Members have their heads covered as they sit about the Palace of Westminster, but in the chamber they wear their hats only when they are seated on the benches. As they walk to their seats or rise to leave the chamber they must be uncovered. This custom is the source of much confusion to new members, and has given rise to many funny "contretemps." The house never fails to show its resentment of a breach of etiquette, however trivial. It will, without distinction of party, unanimously roar with indignation at a new member, who ignorant or unmindful of the parliamentary custom, wears his hat as he walks up or down the floor of the Chamber.

But the story of the humors of the parliamentary hat is not yet ended. When a member is alluded to in the course of a speech he raises his hat, and he performs a similar act of politeness when a minister answers a question put to him. A member addressing the house stands, of course, uncovered. But that rule does not always prevail. There is an occasion when it is positively out of order for a member to speak on his feet with his hat off. He must speak from his seat with his hat on his head. When a debate is terminated, and the question which has been discussed has been put from the chair, an interval of two minutes—during which the electric division bells ring out their summons all over the precincts of St. Stephen's—is allowed to enable members to get to the chamber. The time is taken up a sandglass on the table, and when it has elapsed the doors of the chamber are locked. It is at this particular juncture that a member who desires to address the chair on a point of order should retain his seat and wear his hat. If he were to follow the ordinary practice, and stand up uncovered, he would be roared at and shouted at from all sides of the house for this breach of etiquette.

Mr. Gladstone had occasion a few years ago to address the chair just as a division was about to be taken, and, forgetful of the rule for the moment, he rose to his feet. A shout of "Order, order!" drawing his attention to his mistake, he sat down again and as he never brought his hat into the chamber (an example which is followed by most ministers), he was obliged to put on the headgear of one of his lieutenants who sat on the bench beside him. Now, Mr. Gladstone's head was of an abnormal size. He had to get his own hat made to order. It is improbable that the hat of any member in the house would fit him, but the hat available on the occasion of which I write only just covered his crown, and members made the rafters ring with laughter at his comical efforts to balance it on his head for the few minutes he occupied in speaking from his seat on the front opposition bench.

A SAFE RULE.

"Remember one thing I am about to tell you," said the successful man to the ambitious young man. "It is a rule that is worth remembering."

"What is it, sir?"

"Never do anything that your conscience may reproach you for. Hire somebody else to do it."

LONGEVITY OF NERVES.

With an apparatus called the Myophone a French scientist has proved that the nerves may live many hours after the death of the body. The sound in the instrument shows that a nerve may act on a muscle, in a state of electric excitability without producing more than simple molecular vibration.

Facts About Health

It is Easy to Keep Well If We Know How

Some of the Conditions Necessary to Perfect Health.

The importance of maintaining good health is easily understood, and it is really a simple matter if we take a correct view of the conditions required. In perfect health the stomach promptly digests food and thus prepares nourishment. The blood is employed to carry this nourishment to the organs, nerves, muscles and tissues which need it. The first great essential for good health, therefore, is pure, rich blood. Now it is certainly a fact that no medicine has such as Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is literally true that there are hundreds of people alive and well today who would have been in their graves had they not taken Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is depended upon as a family medicine and general regulator of the system by tens of thousands of people. This is because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure. This is the secret of its great success. Keep your system in good health by keeping your blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which absolutely cures when other medicines fail.

"I had pimples on my face and a large boil on one hand. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and after using three bottles I was cured." J. W. JOHNSON, 3 South Broderick St., San Francisco, Cal.
